Background of the Seminar

Education is a powerful tool towards building a sustainable future. Higher education plays a vital role, not only in shaping the future by educating the professionals of tomorrow, but also by creating a research base for sustainability and providing outreach and service to communities and nations. Emerging challenges such as globalization call for youth of higher education to understand and address issues inherent in the quest for a sustainable future. Higher Education and Sustainable Livelihood (HESL) is a global issue which includes developed, developing and under developed nations of the world. Education and sustainability of better livelihood are inextricably linked, but the distinction between education as we know it and Higher education for sustainability of livelihood is enigmatic for many. It carries with it the inherent idea of implementing sustainability-fostering programs that are locally relevant and culturally appropriate. All sustainable development programs including it must consider the local environmental, economic, and societal conditions. As a result, it will take many forms around the world. The United Nations Organization (UNO) has taken steps to shape higher education through the Guidelines of Academic Institutions in implementing the principles of the UN Global Compact. The Global Universities Network for Innovation (GUNI) also taking new initiatives to integrate higher education to societies.

The core missions/ objectives of higher education (are) to:

- ❖ Provide free flow of knowledge
- ❖ Provide strong base for livelihood
- ❖ Provide cultural strength and
- ❖ Provide foundation to build the nation with well educated people
